EXHIBITS
October / November 2014
Art as Persuasion

During World Wars I & II, artists were called upon to rally support behind the war efforts. A battle of words was fought in the allied, Axis, and neutral nations around the world. This battle was designed to inform, inspire, and ultimately sway public opinion. One of the most visible forms of this propaganda was the war poster. Recruitment, food, war bonds, and family unity were the popular subject matter of these posters. By the late Nineteenth Century, these posters began to be considered an art form.

It is through the generous lending of the Hewlett-Woodmere Public Library that we are able to invite you to view some Great Poster Art of the World Wars I & II.
Meet the Author
